At the Capitol, a page had been stationed on the steps to watch for his appearance, and the minute the ship as in sight both branches of Congress were notified.

Then he guided the ship to the center of the street, and all the way from Thirteenth street to the Capitol was in full sight of the thousands of people who filled the pavements, and even the street.

The flight, Beachy says, is the most successful he has ever made, despite the fact that he met with two minor mishaps. He made twenty-five at the Lewis and Clark Exposition, and six in Cleveland about two weeks ago. In Cleveland he met with a serious accident, but he is gifted with indomitable nerve, and says he will stick to the business, and has hopes of perfecting a machine that will prove of commercial value.

How Start Was Made.

Beachy had a great get-away at the park. A large crowd was on hand to cheer him as he started. The airship was taken out of the aerodome by unlacing the front. Then the navigator critically examined every part of the machine to see that it was in shipshape.

An accident several hundred feet above the air is to be avoided if human ingenuity can prevent it.

The ship is placed on a pair of horses, the five-horse power gasolene engine starts, there is a tightening of the massles of the young aeronaut, as he shouts:

"Now-now-everybody let go."
The men toss the framework in the air. Five minutes later he is 1,400 feet in the air.

"Once or twice the ship gave me trouble," said Beachy, as he landed at the Capitol Grounds, "and I had a hard fight against the wind. Going over the Potomac, every time I crossed the water, the atmosphere had a tendency to draw me down. Then, when I struck land, I would rise again. Beachy carried a letter from Frekerick Ingersoll, designer, builder, and director of the park, which he handed to Secretary Loeb to be delivered to President Roosevelt. The letter contained greeting to the President's return from Georgetown.

Seldom has an exhibition of any sort attracted such a crowd as did Beachy's performance this morning. Within a few minutes after the announcement that he had started was posted on The Times bulletin board all of the tall buildings along the Avenue and F street had their roofs crowded with people, curious to get the first glimpse of the aerial navigator.

Swaying human figures, fervent hallelujahs, hymns of praise, hymns of thankfulness, and, under all, the uplift of an intense religious spirit, characterized the funeral of Aunt Fanny Lomax. NEW YORK, June 14.-Wall Street was his market was likely to get from alaska this season, some brokers estimating it as high as $30,000,000. It was recognized generally that this probably was too high an estimate, as it would mean that New York would get a good proportion of the entire output, which is an impossibility, particularly in view of the fact that more of it than usual may be kept on the Pacific Coast because of the needs of San Francisco.

It was a scene of powerful dramatic interest. The services were conducted by the Rev. James H. Hill. The Rev. Dr. J. G. Butler, pastor of the Luther Memorial Lutheran Church, in whose family Aunt Fanny had been a slave, assisted, and made a brief address, descriptive of the faithful character and deeply religious life of the old woman. The body, with the mantle of the casket slipped back, lay in front of the pulpit, and after the services the great audience passed gazing into the still features of this remarkable old woman.
